If you want to use this tool, then you need to have a good knowledge of drawing and be proficient in it. You have to update the different styles that you use with the new version. The development of Photoshop is always a journey, and the team at Adobe are always looking at new features and ways to improve the software. Photoshop is here to stay, and Adobe hopes the cloud has made it even better—for everyone. First announced in September 2018, the Creative Cloud for Web platform is now live for all current subscribers and will be available to all interested parties in January. Through this new platform, users can design for the digital web easily and effortlessly regardless of context, work on multiple projects at once, or collaborate on them from any location with ease. “We are excited about our new platform because we can focus our top development resources on creating new features for Photoshop and deliver them faster. Also, it brings us closer to our Creative Cloud for the Web customers, so they can work on their projects faster and more efficiently than ever,” says Raghav Natarajan, Senior Product Lead, Photoshop. This new platform supports new native 2D and 3D APIs based on Web platform specifications, Web Compatible Document formats and a brand new Photoshop Experience engine that delivers the same tools and features of desktop Photoshop on the Web, while adjusting to the fact that they are employed from a browser. The first step in this collaboration was delivering an entirely new Experience engine in Photoshop, enabling native 2D and 3D APIs, Web Compatible Document formats, improved Performance, and embedded dialogs for easy workflows and intelligent efforts, according to Natarajan.
